Preface

Jewish Periodicals in Serbia from 1888 to 2016

The Jewish community has always been a distinctive part of the cultural, economic, artistic and social life of Serbia. One of the most important activities of the Jews in this region has been publishing books and periodicals thematically covering a variety of areas of their life in Serbia and beyond. So far, the Jewish press in Serbia has been dealt with partially and sporadically, as a part of different projects, but never within special institutions or at the national level. Except for a few extremely important bibliographical sources, magazine articles and book chapters, there are no comprehensive retrospective reviews, and certainly no organized and exhaustive resources that would enable determining and analyzing its impacts on the Jewish community of Serbia or the society in which the Jews have lived in general.

This publication offers insight into this valuable material. In addition, it will contribute to preserving the memory of a significant field of interest of the Jewish community of Serbia, which is also an essential part of Serbian history and society. Before the Second World War, there used to be 34,000 Jews on the territory of contemporary Serbia, out of whom only a few thousand have remained there after the war. During the short period since the late 19th century to the present day, they have launched and published more than 70 periodicals.

This review have been made with regard to the national and territorial borders and includes all Jewish periodicals that have been issued on the territory of Serbia (the Kingdom of Serbia; the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes; the Kingdom of Yugoslavia). The units are listed in a chronological order, from the first Jewish magazine El Amigo del Pueblo, printed in 1888, to the present day.

Seventy Jewish periodicals have been published in Serbia and six more have been published abroad from 1888 until today. Some of these publications had only one, two, three or four editions, or were published for only one or two years. Some others, however, were successful for decades and had hundreds of editions.

By the beginning of the Second World War, a total of 47 periodicals were published, out of which 18 were from Belgrade, 13 from Novi Sad, 9 from Subotica, 2 from Zemun and 1 from each of the following towns: Vršac, Bačka Topola, Novi Bečej, Stara Kanjiža and Kruševac.

During the Second World War, three publications were published by the Jews from Yugoslavia/Serbia who were kept in Osnabrück military prison camp in Germany and Sumartin Italian prison camp, located on the island of Brač. After enormous ordeal the few survivors had gone through and almost total physical destruction of the community during the Second World War, by 1950 they still found the strength and will to start issuing three new Jewish periodicals. In the period after the Second World War, there were 26 publications in total – 17 from Belgrade, 2 from Novi Sad, 1 from Subotica, 5 from Israel and 1 from the United States.

The brochure contains 76 periodical titles. The description of each publication contains the title, the subtitle, the first and last year of publishing, the publisher or editor, the location where the magazine was launched or the printing house and the collection to which these magazines belong.

These publications were published in Serbian (Serbo-Croatian), Hungarian, German, Ladino, French, or they were multilingual. They were written or printed in Latin, Cyrillic and the Hebrew alphabet. In order to facilitate the identification of the publications, since they were published in different languages, some units contain English translations of the titles and publishers.

Most of the described publications are available at the Jewish Historical Museum, Matica Srpska Library and the National Library of Serbia. It is indicated next to the publication title where each publication is kept. The printed material that has not survived was also recorded.

These publications have significantly contributed, not only to the education of the Jewish community members but also to that of the Serbian society in general. For such a small community, that was almost completely destroyed by the Holocaust, the presented periodicals were a large publishing venture and they show us how, regardless of various historical, social and political circumstances, the Jewish community members tried to preserve the tradition and maintain their writing.

The information contained in this paper could be relevant to the wider scientific community, including researchers, librarians and cataloguers, as well as to the Jewish community in Serbia and abroad. It could serve as a basis for further research and gathering of this old and valuable material.
